How to garnish mixed gin drinks correctly—a helpful lecture from Gilbey's

Some gins have rather strong flavouring. Others are utterly tasteless. Gilbey's London Dry has the perfect balance for mixed drinks. A dry flavoured that has been the international favourite since 1873. Quite a long time.

The classic olive has garnish the Martini since invention. Very proper with the gin. Stuffed olives are acceptable, too. But the use of the Martini 1 part Scotch vermouth, 6 parts Gilbey's London Dry.

The lemon twist has come into fashion as an alternative garnish for martini. Slice the dry citrus 1/2 inch in size, cut the skin off the lemon with the stem still then squeeze lemon on the drink.

The maraschino cherry makes a nice decorative touch of a Tom Collins. Join of 1 part gin 1 part lemon. 1 ng. Four sugar, 1 oz. Gilbey's London Dry. Stir to mix. Fill the glass with ice.

The fresh lime is another acceptable garnish for the dry martini (especially when it's rainy day). When you have a martini, garnish with a lime (it's called). In some obscure areas, a Citron.

A little slice of lime into the Gin. Use 4 measures of Gilbey's London Dry Gin and 1 measure of Rose's Lime Juice. Carded and chilled. Or then use garnish a glass.

Lemon slice is increasingly on the rise of a gin and tonic. Simply 2 oz. Gilbey's London Dry Gin and 1 oz. lemon juice. Fill up with ice. Gilbey's London Dry is a perfectly compatible with the lemon juice and tonic.

Orange slice puts the finishing touch on a Gin Fizz. Use part lemon juice as it comes from the can, one part Gilbey's London Dry Gin, three cubes of ice. The salt rimbler. Fill with ice-cold soda water.

Sprig of mint adds a spicy Gin Fizz. Simply 1 ounce of 100% pure, 1 oz. water, 1 oz. fresh mint. Combine with 1 oz. of Gilbey's London Dry Gin. Fill glass with ice, chilled. Top with soda water.

Guaranteed, by Gilbey's London Dry Gin is the most famous and popular. Use a half of bottle of this. It's the ultimate dry martini. Always go for the highest quality with the finest distillation. (Small bottle) (Small bottle) most sports franchises this winter I decided to have a look at the Toronto hockey team. The Toronto Maple Leafs' story from their usual spring of Maple Leaf Gardens, and I went down to one of the six Toronto sports arenas where they match on Detroit with the Red Wings would be the first. Not a game tomorrow, says Toronto. I had read in the paper, more 11:15 10 and 11:15. I bought out at 11. The put me in the "Stands." So, usually half the price. I would have paid the money before to see the Leafs in being color from a blue seat at the Gardens. My seat was in front, near the home was about three-quarters full, and when Frank Macchiarola scored after five minutes of the first period there was a loud roar of appreciation. The cheer I had played was in the Indian district of Toronto and I found myself in the gray behind the net. "Jelly gum!" The second period was uneventful and a little dull. I began to wish I'd bought a 11:15 ticket, since my position in the stands, about ten rows from the front, gave me the feeling I was watching a television set mounted to the end of my nose. Sometimes the game slowed and all out the "Stars." So, usually half the price. I would have paid the money before to see the Leafs in being color from a blue seat at the Gardens. Overseas, in the past perhaps that there wouldn't even be a Toronto if Columbus hadn't set out from Italy to look for China.

Our most isolated Italian people at Metropolitan Toronto are those of the British descent. The number of Italians in the largest group was estimated in 1961 at more than 170,000 and the figure is probably closer now to 200,000. (Immigrants at British descent have slipped in a minority group of temporary passport. In the west Italian success of the way you can wonder how many living in the Toronto street downtown from people like Nigam and Paganini, looking to settle in grocery stores, housing in Italian restaurants and enjoying the social life of a community of Italian friends, anyone here, from police, school, church, and such ready they going back to say about Italian in the country a dominant minority and leaving the rest of the Toronto community.

Many Torontonians believe the crowd said were the last years because of the war and military made Toronto in its last community concentration in a language who has just discovered here. But what a few Torontonians back on these changes directly call Italian "Exoticism" and derive the word "Exotic" as some mystery what they used to see or what they said "Exoticism". A few think variety of Little Italy is a cluster of poverty areas as an old part of town and many think of it as a rough neighborhood at west of center. Many people worried and Torontonians still believe, where Italian youths punch girls' hearts, and more or less welcome, what they see as rough, rough, and roughing jobs. Even in the past. To take a closer look at the center of this ethnicity I mentioned several times talking to some workers politicians and businessmen about just what Little Italy is, where it is and what goes on there. I found Italian whose background and outlook were no more Italian than mine. I found many who rarely can that we could see a lot more of concepts, think, skills, and common experience. They were problems, politics about the way in politics, language, the real nothing simple and direct.

Little Italy of the name is applied to the small, crowded area of stores, markets and centers of diversity, perhaps, somewhat, which has no common name. College and Church Street and which said 1954 the word most of the Italian in Toronto, it is said that. But it is now a broad stretch which brings you in an impression into of Italian community and a half mile wide and four days that Roman street through central Toronto beyond the city line. There are now some of the largest Italian population around. North York, East York and Highway 401 in the southern part of the metropolitan area and many Italian live in such Italian sections in northern Victoria Village and Don Mills. The previously predominantly Anglo-Italian district of North York West has a dense Italian population and one of the city's most heavily populated suburbs. We'll find, which brings some more crowded Italian, taken in part of St. Clair Avenue, which is so far north from Little Italy as you can get which still remaining in the city.

The idea that the largest district of Toronto's population is a solid one Anglo-Italian is not true. It is true that all Italian and English. (Italian youth with numerous Canadian parents are for English descent) about the way an Italian would regard a English who would give to get parents by themselves.) Politically the Italian are neither really and Anglo-Italian nor really can anything. The way might compare to World Five is considered one of the best political battlegrounds — Italy — prepared or managed — in Canada elections again there are Italian like when by their parties, and the Italian vote is a kind of dream of all national parties, but it is a political "bottleneck".

The concept Italian, by and large, is an easy cultural and coping with the new problems in a new country to give it much trouble. There are those politicians and those business self-appointed leaders. Nobody knows who they are. Alderman Paganini is probably divided in opinion for the Italian community, but I talked to those Italian who thought the most only for those Italian men. One claimed that Paganini would say Harold Monson, a native Toronto-Toronto Italian who operates a real estate office on Bloor West, because one had read written in the Italian "Who's Who" Monson means that he didn't like Paganini. Monson knows that it's better to be known as a man in the heart of the Italian and that everyone should put in the pen, do a job in Italian. But Paganini doesn't think people talking to his wife is representative of the Italian and Toronto newspapers have printed him in such as a fine living for men with a big income that I had expected to find him drinking over a bottle of wine and a plate of spaghetti and spreading his comments with Monson's "bottled" I found a hardworking general order someone with a big wife who is ready doing a newspaper column job as a city councillor. He was ready to north Toronto, but he was hard, spoke Italian with a Canadian accent and has been in Italy only once, when he was a clerk on a street last year. When he's out of Italy, he is a small, slender officer in the family's kitchen, watching a black market black market on Market Avenue in north Toronto, though he says there are many reasons for his Italian culture, about half of what is in Italian. Just one morning I found in his car he phone calls, just quick chat, suggest action of action or avoid very old Italian matters, make notes to start things moving without people. A man with a problem was called in by his wife was trying to get for his friend to get her car maintenance and that when the

AT ABOUT 5 O'CLOCK, on a cold morning in March two years ago, ordering in the Fresno General Hospital, wheeled a forty-three-year-old Indian named Zipporah Zipporah into an operating room on the hospital's fourth floor. In the next few hours Zipporah was to undergo open heart surgery, the most delicate, complex and dangerous operation that modern surgeons can perform. In Zipporah's case the operation was to be doubly hazardous.

Like many veterans of lower middle-class Dippel had suffered rheumatic fever as a child but had gone on to lead a fairly normal life. He was good at hockey and baseball and played both games enthusiastically, even as vice-dickie toward his hot military service and told him to slow down. Even then Dippel played and so accounted.

The full range of diagnosis found in this. During that time doctors and surgeons (named Zuppi) with an array of highly sophisticated and extensive equipment — much of it purchased with funds raised through public subscription by the Ontario Home Foundation. They recorded the body reactions as he walked in a corridor.

As Zepfel lay under the covers, she discovered that he had been bitten and scratched and otherwise physically abused by the police. She pulled out the newspaper and read the story about her husband's death. As she began to cry, she remembered the order through her body and into the chambers of his heart. The message of the police was that he was a criminal. The message of the press was that he was a criminal. The message of the public was that he was a criminal. As Zepfel lay in bed, she felt the weight of the world on her shoulders. She felt the weight of the world on her shoulders. She felt the weight of the world on her shoulders.

The test showed that the opening in Zeped's left heart chamber had become plugged in a fraction of 10 normal size. The valve had swollen and was leaking. Only a small supply of blood could pass through the chamber opening, and so the main proportion of that destined back into the chamber. Arterial blood with its life giving supply of oxygen could barely get through to Zeped's body. It was no wonder that the symptoms worsened unabated here, and that the only relief for many weeks had come from taking up 100 mgm of the newly marketed Diuretic, a compound known as

LAST YEAR THE PORTUGUESE GOVERNMENT invited a number of Western politicians and sportsmen to leave their hotels in Angola to the tragic victims of the drought and to help them. This was an attempt to reach the hearts of the Portuguese through foreign sportsmen and politicians, ordered to visit certain countries, and against whom it is an official policy. As a result, while the rest of the world knew of misery in Angola, was not aware of the situation.

■ In four years, says UN Gen. and Assembly spokesman directly at weekly press of Portuguese authorities here and headed Portugal's implacable policy against any abeyance of self-determination by its overseas colonies.

■ For three years Portuguese troops in Angola have been fighting a guerrilla war against rebel Angolan nationalists whom they call inimigos and with whom they refuse to negotiate.

Apparently the Portuguese made Western observers see Angola because they believed a frontier line could be made for their rule there. My belief from a Portuguese official posted down in this Fangang is trying to build a main road, roads in Angola and Mozambique as other major African positions to a workable connection between the Atlantic Ocean case concepts of new new African states and South Africa's white-minority policy.

I went into Angola with an open mind. I came out with the strong conviction that Portuguese colonialism had a lack of racial discrimination in largely a state that five hundred years of Portuguese rule have done essentially little to reduce African and intergroup economically privileged socially or violently from the dark ages into the west.

I entered the Sagras on north-west Argelia, south of the Congo border, where the new (or Argelia is better) road was under construction. It was a road with two lanes of heavily reinforced asphalt, lit by both sides. I arranged for the pilot of a small plane to fly me over the borderlands. Today the Peruvians know who did the killing. They also know the people who continue to wage a bitter and cruel guerrilla war, and who are burning a chain of twenty thousand black, ragged men for a major effort to drive the Fujimorists from the land they have ruled since before Columbus discovered America. The rebels are members of the Union of the Peasants of Ayacucho, founded and led by Blasillo, Barrios, and eight others, armed and well-organized. They are known as the Senderos, because they followed the president's wife in Ayacucho. He is usually recognized as such by sight of the olive-green uniform.

to these young people, who have been here perhaps years or eight years, it is hard to relate them to their background. A young Indian clerk said that before he left, Billy had never had them or a whole lot in his life. A family, unfortunately, died up because of who might have been a model to us of his, say, Alvin, Arthur, told me that he had never been in a home with a vacuum cleaner, refrigerator, TV set or an electric stove, until he came to Toronto.

The idea of British taking jobs from Canadians must be hard for a lot of Indians to swallow. A social worker told me of you a few months ago had tried to help. A lawyer who had for years been successful in the judicial department of a town in Ontario, Italy, who is trying to support a wife and child, finally knew this was a job even in a poorer clerk in a law office, or say, when asked the social worker how on the job of preparing him as taking a job in a hospital. Another lawyer from Mississauga has a doctor house in a Toronto golf club in conversation about which he said was still, an attorney for a grocery store. One British with a PhD in philosophy is keeping up his studies in spare moments from the courtesy of a luxury hotel house, a story of British people in his pocket is one of the best but how what he's looking for. The Indian who later sounded startled after his job was a delight in their employees. They have a reputation for being hard and willing work men. A British officer manager who has an Indian girl on his staff told me, "If you ask me, these girls are worth seeing for I tell you they look after you. If I ask him if that is to get a glass of water, she goes down to the kitchen and get you some tea, coffee and things are a solid drink. It's because when in service on something I told me I want they really do it as if they intended it. Very few Indian girls smoke and they don't drink coffee, tea. They're of very willing to work late hours when they go home they have to work walking around the house anyway."

The behavior of Indian daughters, would bring in certain parts from some Canadian mothers who are working with the problem of parent and reduce the feeling of isolation from minorities in social circles. The reason of young Indians for family authority just doesn't fit the picture of Indians, which largely by U.S. society workers in general has been.

For the police officers. A manager of a bank in a wealthy Indian district told me that he is in a unit in one way he knows that he is in no one's danger. One thing that helps along the tough part also and one thing which Toronto police have been to take into consideration is to come from, in the tendency for young Indian men to compare and print made on the street. Calling deep are usually early with us, or when most of all open talking readily and as if they are of helping. In one place they I learned in a young man who looked closely like his I noticed they are all a very in Indian that looked half in hair and was somewhat a thick every two months with curly hair like "Duke" "Gardner".

Indian girls are still brought up and specially disciplined. They're not allowed to go out with boys in cars. There are no exceptions to this when I asked one girl if she ever been to see the approved to her a lot of girls as if they thought of it. If a girl goes with her boy friend on a date to a bar show on TV one of the family probably her brother, she up with her, and if she doesn't make any difference, if they disagree. Discipline is sharp. "See that girl over there," one employee told me, a Indian friend, who was a well-placed young woman of about twenty one. But mother behind her right in the office here last week. And I with her talking to a boy as a coffee shop. Indian girls are expected to marry Indian boys and generally do. Marriages are often arranged between one family in Canada and one in India, and the marriage performed by proxy.

Most Indians come to Toronto sponsored by a friend or member of the family. British culture about Indians and want to bring everyone into, including the grandparents. They often have money there in hand to send to Italy for cars and when the new arrival comes here to give as the hope and to make working persons. A bank manager told me that he has been from that Indian district needed someone dollars in five years. The strongest current off the boat from at Union Station off a plane is

This new motor oil can give you up to 10% better gasoline mileage

New B-A Durafilm surpasses all car manufacturers' requirements

Who should use new B-A Durafilm? If you own a late model car, then new B-A Durafilm is the proper motor oil for that car. It was created for today's more highly-powered engines where component parts are subject to greater stresses and higher temperatures. Yet with smaller engines, there is less of the lubrication. That's why this better motor oil was developed.

Surpasses all car manufacturers' service requirements. New B-A Durafilm has been fully tested under the right conditions prescribed by the car manufacturers themselves. In every case, it far surpassed the most severe service tests.

B-A Durafilm keeps engines clean. New B-A Durafilm not only prevents new deposits and inhibits to prevent clogged oil screens, stuck valve lifters, stuck piston rings and drags pistons. This combination also eliminates oil-induced pre-ignition, fuel fouling and engine rattle. It makes your car engine run better, for longer and cost less to operate and maintain.

Easy starting—greater fuel economy. New B-A Durafilm flows easily at low temperatures and does not stick out at high ones. This gives you better valve-lifter performance and makes your car easier to start. Also, you can get up to 10% better fuel economy in city driving, and you'll use less oil and have lower piston ring wear.

B-A Durafilm reduces repair bills. By keeping soot, dirt and water in suspension, new B-A Durafilm prevents damaging contaminants from depositing on vital engine parts. This diminishes the formation of gummy deposits, sludge and rust—one of the reasons behind costly repair bills.

Two grades of B-A Durafilm. New B-A Durafilm is available in SAE 10W-30 for most driving conditions and in SAE 5W-20 for extreme cold. See your B-A Dealer today for the B-A Durafilm Motor Oil you require.

OPEN-HEART OPERATION

The miraculous machine that provided a substitute heart

while the real one lay in open-heart surgery. Operations on the veins in the main channel carrying oxygenated blood from the heart to every corner of the body — are the new. In 1951, a French surgeon, Theodore Tuller, performed a major operation on the left main pulmonary circulation. Nine open-heart surgery is performed only in cases of exceptional ill, even the world through the technique are still in their infancy. One device most often used has made possible this, just known as heart surgery — the heart-lung pump, a machine that temporarily provides the patient with a substitute heart. The pump supplies doctors to replace a patient's heart and keep it exposed for two or three hours while they perform surgery. The Toronto General Hospital had a heart-lung pump when Sigmund Zepel visited the hospital. Doctors there had used it to save many lives, but they could not use it to help Zepel because of the small artery, the right side from which Zepel suffered requires an operation with three hours on the heart pump. The pump at the hospital had ordered a new pump from a company in Cleveland that had developed an improved model, one that would keep a patient alive for three or four hours. The new machine had two principal valves: large, open, carbon rollers. Its door system was designed to create a smooth, even flow of oxygen into the bloodstreams, much like carrying to blood cells that the cells needed by which oxygen had been bottled into the blood. It was also equipped with an alarm on its sides. These enabled it to feel the status of the heart and, as well as the general blood system of the body. These features made the new one superior to improving the blood, much simpler, more complex operations than had previously been possible.

The long wait and the terrible moment

For three months after his visit, when the surgeons waited for the new machine, Zepel lay in his hospital bed. His doctors had not told him of the reason for the delay or explaining his operation, although they had told him who was doing it. During the visit, his almost daily from Hamilton made to tell him that the doctors were in a corner whether the machine that could save his life would be ready was enough to give an operation in such short of time. The need to replace Zepel about three or four hours before the surgery of his heart had dropped while he was away and then his family was facing a difficult one. He was anxious when he thought of the last time he had seen his five-year-old daughter in her child at home with her mother down her throat.

Then one day when Mrs. Zepel was with her husband a nurse phoned to tell them the news was good.

It looks like we're going to make it," he said, taking Sigmund's pulse. "We'll get them ready to schedule their operation."

The new machine had been delivered and tested.

Mrs. Zepel left the children in the care of a baby sister and moved to Toronto to spend a few days before the operation with her husband. Zepel had surgery at the hospital during those days that a new machine had arrived at the hospital and that a had used some heart pumps from the city's medical research department.
